It is relieved by a yellow tree here, and three russet-garbed oaks yonder, and then is interspread with patches of lovely bracken.-Peewits are flying low and settling beyond the furze bushes. A Snipe rises at my feet and darts away, and presently is out of sight. Above, a Lark sings his simple but sweet song. What a glorious landscape all of this must appear to be from his lofty point of view! no wonder, therefore, that he sings! The notes are not so loud as they were in the spring; and although he is at no great height, they are not very-distinct. A Magpie leaves the wood and drops across to the oaks, chucking as he flies. Cock Pheasants are calling defiantly,...
