Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from A Laboratory Manual for Comparative Vertebrate Anatomy Several years ago the method of procedure in the laboratory work in vertebrate zoology in this University was changed from the type plan, then in common use, to the comparative plan. No doubt a similar change has been made in many other institutions. A suitable manual for the comparative method has, however, hitherto been lacking; the present publication attempts to supply this need. There can scarcely be any question of the superiority of the comparative method of study of vertebrate anatomy, for by this method the student not only learns all of the anatomical facts brought out by the type method but he also acquires an understanding of vertebrate and human structure which he is quite unable to attain by the older method of study. In view of the fact that the majority of the students taking courses in vertebrate anatomy at the present time are preparing for medicine, it seems obligatory that they be taught the history of the human body a revealed by the study of the anatomy of vertebrates. On the other hand, the comparative method is perhaps faulty in that it may not give the student a clear-cut picture of the characteristics of the various classes of vertebrates. Thus, while the student readily learns the history of the aortic arches, for example, he does not readily associate any particular group of vertebrates with a particular condition of the arches, when the comparative method is followed. This defect should probably be remedied in the lecture part of the course. I have attempted to remedy it to a slight extent by introducing the section on the...
