A September 1989 amendment to the wheat program for the 1990 crop year allows producers to plant in excess of their crop acreage base in exchange for a reduction in the number of acres covered by deficiency payments. nonrecourse loan benefits. Continuing to plant the program crop on the flexible acres is therefore somewhat more attractive than if these benefits were to be restricted in the same way as deficiency payments. Estimates of net returns per acre for major crops by region of the country were examined to determine possible shifts in plantings resulting from the triple base option. Table 2 shows the estimated net changes in plantings of major crops stemming from the triple base option under the two cases. In Case 1, there is a net reduction in land (relative to the CBO baseline) devoted to the program crops, and an addition to soybeans. In Case 2, the net change in land devoted to program crops is smaller because acreage reduction program requirements were relaxed. Land is assumed to shift out of program crop production into soybeans and other nonprogram crops. This shift, however, is largely accommodated by reducing the amount of land that has to be idled to satisfy the acreage reduction requirements. The changes shown in Table 2 for both Case 1 and Case 2...
